

AFTER WAR LORI GRINKER

Veterans from a World in Conflict

Exhibition Proposal

Exhibition Proposal

Amidst the ongoing carnage in Iraq, Afghanistan, the Middle East, Chechnya, Columbia, and Sudan, the exhibition Afterwar — Lori Grinker's fifteen-year project to document the physical and psychological wounds that remain for the frontline war veterans of the last century — is now being prepared for an international tour. Comprised of fifty-one photographs, and excerpts from interviews that Grinker conducted with the men, women, and children who fought in conflicts from the Great War to the present US-led deployment in Iraq, this timely exhibition seeks to illuminate our culture of war as measured in its human, personal toll.

As Lori Grinker states in the preface to the accompanying book Afterwar: Veterans From a World in Conflict, published by de.MO in 2005:

Afterwar is not about the heroics of war, although many of the individuals photographed and interviewed for this book have done heroic things. Covering the entire range of combatants of the past one hundred years, across boundaries of culture, geography and time, this project is meant as a polyphony of voices revealing how people find themselves in war, what happens to them there, and the marks that remain when the fighting is over.

Showings of the work have previously been held at the Pingyao International Photography Festival in China in the Fall of 2003, in Baltimore, Maryland at the Maryland Art Place in the Spring of 2004, and in 2005 at the United Nations headquarters in New York. In 2006, it was presented at the Project 4 Gallery in Washington, D.C., at the Indiana State University Art Gallery in Terre Haute and at the Minnesota Center of Photography in Minneapolis. The same year a selection of images was featured in the “Body at Risk” exhibition at the International Center of Photography in New York, curated by Carol Squires. That Spring, the Al Riwaq Gallery in Adliya, Bahrain included a selection of Afterwar images in a reprise of the Open Society Institute’s “Moving Walls” group exhibition first shown at their headquarters in New York in 2002. Selections have also been seen in major magazines and on television throughout the world.

About the Exhibit

The twentieth century was history's deadliest. More than 100 million people died in over 165 wars, while countless others were wounded as nationalism, competing ideologies and religions, and genocidal conflicts raged from Europe, through Asia, Africa and the Americas. Fifteen years in the making, Lori Grinker's Afterwar spans twenty-four conflicts in thirty countries and reflects the full range of war's combatants: volunteers and forced conscripts, guerillas, mercenaries, and patriots. Among their ranks we find child soldiers as young as nine, and many women: mothers and daughters, some wounded in battle, others tortured.

Curated by Robert Pledge, editor of Li Zhensheng — Red-Color News Soldier (Phaidon 2003), and recipient of the 2004 Overseas Press Club of America "Olivier Rebbot Award," the exhibition has been culled from thousands of images, and is arranged in reverse chronological order. Each of the images — photographed in subdued color to convey a contemporaneous, everyday reality devoid of mythology or sentimentalism — is accompanied by caption information and brief excerpts from Grinker's interviews with her subjects.

The exhibition showcases fifty-one digital fine-art chromogenic prints, including seven large-size images and several archival photographs from the veterans' own albums. An introductory text panel by Robert Pledge deals with the relationship between war and photography, and a text panel by journalist Chris Hedges provides a historical and philosophical context.

With its intimate images and powerful voices, Afterwar contains a natural educational dimension, one that easily lends itself to the development of pedagogic curricula, including lectures, workshops, and interactive programs for school-age children, university students and adults.

About the Project

Afterwar was conceived in 1986 during a trip Lori Grinker made to Israel and the Occupied Territories to produce a photo essay about Arab-Jewish cooperation. As it was the eve of the first Intifada, she encountered few instances of cooperation between Palestinians and Israelis, but she did meet Israeli veterans who inspired her to document their life after war: the rehabilitation process, their personal relationships, and their views of the conflicts in which they had fought. As an American, she heard in these former soldiers' experiences echoes of the Vietnam veterans in the U.S. The support they received at home was radically different, yet the alienation, nightmares and pain seemed strikingly similar. It is this shared experience she aimed to capture in Afterwar.

In 1989, with backing from Life magazine, Grinker traveled to Vietnam and Cambodia to photograph ex-combatants from different sides of the region's recent conflicts. Thus began a decade of journeying to over thirty countries—from Eritrea to El Salvador, and from Russia to the Persian Gulf— seeking out other veterans' stories, trying to capture images of 'the wars' after the wars are over. Men, women, and children who have walked the fields and survived, often with damaged bodies and scarred lives, who emerged with new ideologies, conflicts, questions, and emotions—with the special knowledge of the killer, the hero, and the defeated.

With the book and the exhibition, produced together with Contact Press Images, Grinker hopes to encourage viewers to reflect upon the complex social, economic, and political conditions behind these conflicts, and on the humanistic and philosophical aspects of war. If there is one thing Afterwar reveals, it is that all wars have a profoundly similar effect on their participants. It is not the politics of a particular war that most concerns Grinker, but "the history and our culture of warring that rages against humanity."

About Lori Grinker

A native New Yorker, Lori Grinker began her career in 1980, while still a student at Parsons School of Design, when her photo-essay about a young boxer was published as a cover story by Inside Sports. During that time she met another young fighter, thirteen year-old Mike Tyson, whose life and rise to the heavyweight championship she documented for the following decade.

In February of 1993, Grinker's photographs and text on the plight of the Dinka tribe in Southern Sudan was published on The New York Times op-ed page, and featured on CNN. A second photo-essay covering the effects of war on ex-combatants appeared on the op-ed page in November 1993. Her work has since been featured in numerous magazines around the world, including Life, Time, The New York Times Magazine, Newsweek, The Village Voice, People, and American Photo in the U.S.; The Sunday Times Magazine, The Independent, and Vogue in the U.K; Stern and GEO in Germany; El Pais Semanal, El Mundo, and La Vanguardia in Spain; Libération, GEO, and Photo in France; Marie Claire in Australia and South Africa.

Her photographs have been widely exhibited and are held in the permanent collections of the Portland Museum of Art, the Houston Museum of Fine Arts, the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art, the Israel Museum in Jerusalem, the Jewish Museum in New York City, the Joods Historisch Museum in Amsterdam, and the International Center of Photography in New York City.

In 2002 Grinker received the Photo District News "Best of Photojournalism Award" for her coverage of the attack on the World Trade Center. Afterwar has received grants and awards from the Puffin Foundation (2002), the Florence and John Schumann Foundation (2000), the Hasselblad Foundation, the New York Foundation for the Arts Catalogue, and the Luxembourg Centre National de l'Audio-Visuel (1999). She won the W. Eugene Smith Fund Fellowship Award in 1998, and the Ernst Haas Grant and The Santa Fe Center for Visual Arts Project Grant in 1997. In 1996 she received a World Press Photo first place award in the arts category for her story on a blind women's orchestra in Cairo, Egypt.

Her book, The Invisible Thread; A Portrait of Jewish American Women, was first published in 1989 (The Jewish Publication Society). An exhibition of this work toured the United States (1989-1992). She has been a member of Contact Press Images, the international photo agency, since 1988.

Support

Lori Grinker's quiet, poignant, grim vision of war is a document of the ineradicable scars left on combatants all over the world. War finds ingenious ways to inflict damage. Grinker finds ingenious ways to depict it.

Vicki Goldberg

Photography critic for The New York Times
Author of The Power of Photography: How Photographs Changed our Lives (Abbeville)

I am enormously moved and impressed by Lori Grinker's work. It parallels closely much that I have written about, and conveys powerfully the principle of what I call a "species mentality," an outlook and sense of self bound up with a strong awareness of being part of humankind.

Robert Jay Lifton

Visiting professor of psychiatry at Harvard Medical School
Author of Death in Life: Survivors of Hiroshima (University of North Carolina Press)

This project makes a significant contribution to our understanding of the high cost of war and the men, women, and children who suffer in it. Afterwar is one of the most compelling visual projects that I have seen on the subject of war and peace.

Bill Moyers

Broadcast journalist for PBS and former press secretary for President Lyndon Johnson.

Lori Grinker reveals to us the wars that never end. Her photographs are visions of both sympathy and condemnation. They bring war home from the battlefield and give it a human face.

James Nachtwey

War photographer and author of Inferno (Phaidon)

You quickly realize – both from her photos and from observing how she works – that her level of involvement is out of the ordinary. In short, Lori Grinker is one of those special journalists who merits our attention and our support

Sydney Schanberg

Pulitzer-prize winning journalist whose work on the Cambodian genocide inspired the film,
The Killing Fields.

The span and scope of war, of some of the recent sufferings that human beings have inflicted on one another; it is valuable to be reminded of this, as we are by these lucid, irrefutable pictures.

Susan Sontag

Essayist and author of Regarding the Pain of Others (Farrar, Straus and Giroux).

Afterwar gives us an intimate, extraordinary view of what war does to those who fight it. If we are to understand war, and try and stop it, we should look at and listen to those who took on this burden. Nobody wants war. This work embraces what that means on a human level. We must recognize what these individuals sacrificed for all of us.

Charles B. Strozier

Director of the Center on Terrorism and professor of history at the City University of New York.

Grinker's camera uses the human body as the narrative device to tell of the horrors of war. We are asked to look at something which we for the most part see from a distance, which we hear about, but never have to confront. We are asked to look at our own humanity, and its inherent contradictions.

Deborah Willis-Kennedy

Professor of photography at New York University
Author of Black: A Celebration of Culture (St. Martin's Press)

Contributors

EDITING

Robert Pledge, curator and editor, is the president and co-founder of the photographic agency Contact Press Images. He has originated and curated numerous exhibitions around the world, including "Contact: Photojournalism Since Vietnam" in 1988, the first major contemporary Western photojournalism exhibit presented in the People's Republic of China. He has produced a dozen books and catalogues related to photography and history, and conceived and directed the book, Red-Color News Soldier: A Chinese Photographer's Odyssey Through the Cultural Revolution (Phaidon 2003) and the accompanying traveling exhibition. In 2004 he received the Overseas Press Club's "Olivier Rebbot" award for the book Red-Color New Soldier. He has been involved with the Afterwar Project since its inception in 1989.

WRITING

Jacques Menasche, a writer and journalist, is the author with Robert Pledge of both Eleven: Witnessing the World Trade Center 1974-2001 (Universe/Rizzoli International 2002), and Li Zhensheng — Red-Color News Soldier: A Chinese Photographer's Odyssey Through the Cultural Revolution (Phaidon 2003). He has written about conflicts and culture in the USA, Afghanistan, the Middle East, and China. His essays have been included in New York September Eleven Two Thousand and One and Rethink: Cause and Consequences of 9/11 (both de.MO publications), and in The New York Daily News, ESPN The Magazine, Vanity Fair, and other publications around the world. Based in New York, he has been affiliated with Contact Press Images since 1998.

INTRODUCTION

Chris Hedges, a veteran war correspondent and former divinity student, is the author of War is a Force that Gives us Meaning (Anchor 2003), based on his experiences in the Balkans, the Middle East, Africa, and Central America. Before joining the staff of The New York Times in 1990, he worked for The Dallas Morning News, The Christian Science Monitor, and National Public Radio. In 2002, he received the Amnesty International Global Award for Human Rights Journalism, and shared the Pulitzer Prize awarded to The New York Times for its coverage of global terrorism.
